Subrecipients are collaborating institutions that participate on sponsored projects received by a different institution known as the Pass-through Entity. The working relationship between the Pass-through Entity and a collaborator is established through a formal agreement. This differs from work with a contractor/supplier (previously vendor) who only provides goods or services. A Subrecipient completes work that influences a project programmatically for a significant portion of the work.

It is important to determine if the outside entity that will be paid from the project is either a subrecipient or a consultant. This allows the Office of Sponsored Research (OSR) to ensure the appropriate agreements are in place. It also ensures that the entity will be setup in ConnectCarolina correctly so that payments are made correctly. For more information see OSR’s Consultants Operating Standard and OSR’s Outgoing Subrecipient Agreements Operating Standard.

Subrecipient Qualifications
Subrecipients have substantive, programmatic participation in a sponsored project. This is most easily identified by their involvement in designing, directing, and conducting the research as proposed. The subrecipient identifies a representative to manage the project at their institution and they are considered key personnel on the University’s project. They are given some flexibility to conduct their portion of the research.

Consultant/Supplier Qualifications
Consultants, also known as suppliers, are independent contractors unaffiliated with the University, hired to provide specific services or ancillary goods for a brief and limited period of time that the Principal Investigator needs to conduct the research effort. Consultants are not directly involved with the scientific direction of the project. They are providing goods or services in a consistent manner for all of their business customers. There is also no independence in how they complete the activities being purchased and they are not responsible for the research results.

For budget estimations, compensation for a consultant is based on their salary and rate history for comparable services and is subject to funding agency guidelines. Compensation for consultants is expressed as a daily rate or a fixed amount for the services to be provided. Although consultants can receive reimbursement for travel expenses, they are not eligible to receive fringe benefits and cannot be provided with supplies, administrative support, or other standard business items.

Subrecipient Determination
For purposes of subrecipient determination, consultants and suppliers are considered the same. For assistance in determining if a consultant/supplier should be a subrecipient, review the table in Appendix A and the supplemental questionnaire in Appendix B.

For consultants with a primary appointment at another Institution of Higher Education (IHE) must provide a signed certification letter from their IHE Authorized Representative, which acknowledges that there is not a conflict of commitment and if the IHE’s resources will be used. See Appendix C.

Subagreement Determination Questionnaire

How to use the Questionnaire:

In answering the questions below, more "Yes" answers for questions 1-4 and more "No" answers to questions 5-9 signify that a consultant/supplier relationship is more appropriate. Subsequently, more "No" answers to questions 1-4 and more "Yes" answers to questions 5-9 indicate a subrecipient relationship is more appropriate. If you have questions left unanswered by this checklist regarding subrecipients, please contact your OSR Sponsored Projects Specialist.
